PROBLEM · CITY PUBLIC TRANSPORT · PS-08

Three operators, three tickets. Riders give up and take the bike.

Metro (GMRC), BRTS Janmarg (AJL) and AMTS city buses are run separately. A commuter combining them gets no single view of the journey, its total cost or the transfer walks, so many use private vehicles.

3 operators
separate tickets and apps

3,235 bus stops
AMTS + BRTS timetables, none of them show metro

53 metro stations
4 lines, changes at Old High Court, Motera Stadium, GNLU

One fare ₹30

₹40 if bought separately

See how the fare is split

Your ₹30 is split like this

₹40 if bought separately, ₹30 with one ticket. Each operator is paid for its own part of the trip.

AMTS ₹10.53 | Metro ₹10.99 | BRTS ₹8.49

Operator	km	Alone	Share	Net
AMTS City Bus	7.9	₹15	₹10.53	₹10.31
GMRC Metro	7.0	₹15	₹10.99	₹10.77
AJL BRTS Janmarg	2.7	₹10	₹8.49	₹8.32
Integrator fee 2%				₹0.60
Total	17.6	₹40	₹30	₹30

Split rule: each operator keeps its standalone fare, minus its km-share of a ₹5 discount per change between operators (2 changes = ₹10 off), minus a 2% clearing fee that pays the private integrator.

Done →

IMPACT + PPP

One journey, one fare, piloted on existing data.

Who builds

A private integrator builds the planner + one QR/NCMC ticket

Who runs and pays

Operators pay a 2% clearing fee per integrated ticket; the city owns the data

Why now

All timetables already exist as open GTFS; no new hardware for a pilot

Honest limits: scheduled AMTS/BRTS timetables, not live GPS; bus fare slabs are assumptions (BRTS publishes ₹5–₹50); metro wait = half the average headway; Gandhinagar GGTSL e-buses have no public timetable.

Thank you!
